Tensile Fabric Structures

INOX HELLAS overseas

Tensile fabric structures are an example of how nature has inspired mankind with its most elegant and efficient forms and shapes.

Tensile fabric structures are made primarily of PVC or PTFE and utilize cables and steel, to provide shape and support. The fabrics used are thin, light and long-lasting. By tensioning the fabric in all directions a shape is formed which is pre-determined by the design and the cutting pattern of the fabric. In combination with traditional building components, the effect of force flow in the thin-patterned fabric generates very unique forms and shapes.
